CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC.

What Does Christ's Life Show Us About the Father? (John xii, 34.)

BY AMOS R. WEILS.

A poor woman in the depths of Central Africa was drinking in the story of Jesus Christ as a missionary told it to her. At last she broke out in exclamations of joy. "Oh," she said, "that is the one who comes to me so often in my prayers. I could not find out who he was."

When we look upon Christ, we see what the world has been longing for about and dreaming over and longing for. It has all come true. It was as Paul said on Mars Hill: "Whom therefore ye ignorants and unlearned do not hear."

In the first place, Christ shows us our God as our guide. He is the way. We are like the encumbers of the ship for down he has led us. We cannot see where we cannot see where we are going, but we can hear the directing beat of the pilot up above, and we can turn the ship according to the way he has ordered. We can see the journey through to the end. Those that do not know him in Christ, grope through life like a blind man. The true Christian, however, marks his onward course as boldly and cheerfully as if it were day.

Then, Christ has disclosed to us the path of truth. We who were living in a false and tricky universe, universes of shame and craftiness! Sometimes the shade under God's iron law, but when it got to be too hot, we would run away from it. But we were not for the powerful pull of the sun, our earth would fly off into space, cold, dark and dead. Therefore Spurgeon, realizing that man must perish, sighs and exclaims: "O, Christians, you will never walk aright, and keep in the orbit of truth, if it be not for the influence of Christ, perpetually attracting thee to the center."

Again, Christ shows that the father is the source of all life. The ancients had a theory of a sun god who had no body, but in his infinite art or the application of man. At last he made a marvellously beautiful statue of an woman, took it to Olympus, and said, "Behold, here is power at the feet of Jupiter, and I expect the god to bestow upon him something that would make him happy." Thereupon Jupiter, touched with admiration, gave the sculptor to be his wife. In actual daily fact and not in fable, our God pours life into our soil, which is dead and sterile, and gives it the cold smile of existence with vitalizing blood. It is because we live are unsatisfactory. It is because we do not know God in Christ.

Our God is the truth, in order that we may instruct others. And he is our life, in order that we may go out to others the warmth, the light, the power that did only can bestow.

PICTURES THE ROMANTIC RHINE.

Doctor L. H. Dorchester Gives First of Three Lectures.

The Romantic Rhine" was the subject of an illustrated lecture given at Lindell Avenue M. E. Church last night by the Reverend Doctor L. H. Dorchester.

The river was traversed pictorially from the Dutch dikes to the Alpine Heights, affording a view of various scenes in Holland, including the canals and windmills of Rotterdam.

In a steamer trip from Bonn to Mainz, picturesque castles and vineyards along the bank were pointed out, all recalling panoramic views of Heidelberg and its old castles, of Baden, the Black Forest, Schaffhausen, the Rhine, Palis and Lake Constance.

With views of wild cascades, mountain peaks and glaciers at the head of the waters of the Rhine in the Alps, the lecturer said that a tour which will be given under the auspices of the women of Lindell Avenue M. E. Church for the benefit of the social settlement of the German-American Memorial Building, Cass Avenue and Seventh street.
